Then & Now

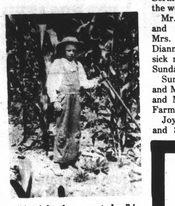
From Where I Sit

Can you guess which one is Ralph Barlow THEN? Why, the one with the curls, of course!

The 4-H Club boys in the Oakville School were listening attentively. The year was 1922 and Mr. W. H. Burns, County Agent for Appomattox was explaining to the boys about the fair that would soon be coming to Appomattox.

"Boys," he said, "I'd like to have you enter corn for judging. I hope each one of you will choose twelve ears of your very best corn and six of your choice stalks of corn as your exhibit. You can never tell, one of you just might win a blue ribbon!"

Ralph Barlow knew his corn was good and for that reason he had a difficult time choosing the ears he would enter in the fair competition. Finally he made the choice. Not only did he enter the corn but he walked away with a blue ribbon! And then there was more - -



"A mighty long row to hoe" is probably what Ralph Barlow was thinking when this picture was taken at age 12!

Mr. Burns was proud that one of his boys had captured a blue ribbon. He also wished he had some corn of that quality to enter in the Richmond Fair; then he got an idea.

Ralph Barlow could hardly believe his ears; Mr. Burns was offering him all of $10.00 for the twelve ears and the six stalks of corn! Would Ralph be willing to sell? He would, without a doubt!

"I felt so rich," Ralph Barlow said, with a smile; "That was a lot of money back THEN. You know, Mr. Burns took that corn to the fair in Richmond and won still another prize!"

Ralph Barlow, son of the late William Henry Barlow and the late Florence Elmina Hamilton Barlow, was born and reared on a farm between Oakville and Vera in Appomattox County.

When Ralph was ready to leave for school, his lunch all packed in a gallon bucket, it was a 'school wagon' and not a school bus that carried him on his way. Unless, of course, it was approximately a month before school was to close for summer vacation. As it usually happened, about thirty days before the closing date of school, the county was so low in operating funds that it became necessary to park the covered wagon and send the children walking to and from school for the final month.

The late John Bingham drove the covered wagon for many years. Ralph recalled the severe cold the youngsters endured as they rode the slow, jostling, wagon to and from school.

When the weather was bad and the roads became muddy, "Buck Nowlin's Hill" presented quite a problem. It was often necessary for seven or eight of the boys to get off at the bottom of the hill so that the wagon could make it to the top through the mud and mess.

Ralph Barlow remembered the feeling of sadness he experienced when his teacher, the late Elizabeth F. Harvey, had to leave school for a few days because of the death of her mother. Even as a child Ralph had great compassion.

"I thought," he said, "It must be an awful experience to lose your mother." His young heart was heavy until his teacher was back at school and in charge of her students.

The Barlow family was a large one; there were eleven children. In addition to Ralph there was Kenneth, deceased; Clarence, deceased; Lila B. Herncall; Allene B. Lucado; Louise B. Watts, deceased; Helen B. Gunter; Neola B. Smith; Christine B. Staten; Doris B. Brockwell; and a baby, unnamed, who died shortly after birth.

Ralph laughed heartily at what his father, who worked for many years in the coals fields of West Virginia, once said, "I lived away from home most of the time and had a family of eleven. I wonder what would have been the size of my family had I remained at home all of the time!"

Not only was Ralph's father in the coal business, but his Grandfather Barlow was a coal operator in Elkhorn Coal and Coke Company in Mayberry, West Virginia. In fact, Ralph still has some of the bill heads dating back to 1888 and up to 1902 that were used by the firm. The green ink is still clear!!

After the death of Grandfather Barlow, Ralph's father went to work in Freeborn, Kentucky; from this job he paid a visit to the family on the farm about once every three months. "My father loved the farm," said Ralph as he talked about his early life; "He just didn't seem to know much about operating it. He even went to the expense and trouble of building a dairy barn and purchasing cattle but he was never really successful in this endeavor."

It was on the family farm in December of 1924 that Ralph Barlow suffered the accident, that left him disabled.

On the very last day of December, and a cold one at that, Kenneth and Ralph Barlow were helping their father haul in from the field some bunches of feed. The wagon was piled high and Ralph was sitting on the very top.

Suddenly, the wagon began to wobble, then it began to topple, and then over it went!

Down by the coupling pole went Ralph, head first! The ground was frozen so hard that when he hit, it was like falling on cement!

Ralph lay on the hard, frozen ground; he didn't know what he felt. There was blood, lots of it and there was a peculiar feeling of numbness.

The accident occured around 2 p.m. and when he was finally able to get himself up, (with help), and walk to the house, he found he couldn't raise his arms. They hung limp and lifeless at his sides.

Going inside, he stood by the fireplace and as he tried desperately to reach down and pick up a stick of wood, he almost fell falt on his face. He was helped to he bed.

The late doctors, Christian and Twyman, were summoned out to the farm. They went over Ralph Barlow very carefully, and then came the distressing news. The doctors, as kindly as possible, told Ralph's parents that their young son of sixteen had a broken neck. There was nothing that could be done - - he was going to die.

Mr. and Mrs. Barlow, deeply disturbed, were not willing to accept the verdict of "hopeless." They wanted their son taken to the hospital in Lynchburg; maybe there was something that could be done.

The late Dr. Barksdale, after giving the young man a very thorough examination, told the family the same thing the Appomattox doctors had said, "No hope, just a matter of time."

When, a day or so later, the doctor was surprised to find Ralph still "hanging in there", he decided to operate. Ralph survived the opration but as soon as it was over, he could feel nothing from his head down. The doctors and nurses stuck him with pins and even pinched him. They tried over and over again to get response - - there was none.

Try to imagine, if you will, a sixteen year old boy, without feeling from his shoulders down, lying on a hospital bed, wondering - - what can life possibly hold for me now.

Come with me next week, won't you, as we go back over that long hard road that lay ahead of Ralph Barlow. It was, indeed hard, but that Ralph, he is quite a guy! You'll See!
